Autumn 2013

Bridge on the Pioneer Pass trail

Its that time of year again...

The fresh Autumn air feels good in your lungs, and the smell of apple pie makes you feel warm and cozy. That sounds like fall to me. What is most amazing, is how the leaves on the trees make themselves over to illustrate their beauty one last time, before passing on for winter.

Franklin Creek State Natural Area is absolutely beautiful right now. You can enjoy the breeze coming off of the water, while you listen to the leaves crinkle beneath your feet. Instead of raking up the piles in your yard so the kids and the dog can “help” spread them around again... come over and let them rustle around in the woods. Even after the leaves fall, they leave behind spooky silhouettes that are picture perfect around Halloween time!

Spread the word to your family & friends to come visit. There will be plenty of volunteer opportunities coming up!
